Planets in October. Saturn is evening star during the month, with the exception of the first four days, and it is his turn to hold the place of honor among the planetary brotherhood. He comes into opposition with the sun on the 5th, when the sun, earth, and planet are in the same straight line, with the earth in the centre. He is therefore at his neares; point of approach, and takes on his brightest but and largest dimensions. Even now he is more than eight hundred milion mile, away, and, at such an im-wense distance, the difference between his greatest and least brilinery is not large in amonat, though plainly perceptible. Thus his apparent diameter is now a little more than twenty seconds of a degree; six mont is hence. when faithest from us, it will be about four ean seconds of a degree. Veous, under the same conditions, measures sixty two seconds at her least diva toe and only nine and a half at her greatest distance. Sa uro rises now at 6 J'clock; on the 5.n. at sunset, and on the 31st, about 4 clock. He shou'd be looked for at present in the east, an hour or two after sun c', when sufficien ly high above the horizon to be easi y detre ed, and wil be found opesiderably farth. er north than Jupiter and about two hours benind him. His peculiar color of a dall yell in. steady light, and the absence of large stars in the neighborhool, will scure his recognition as soon as the full moon is out of the way. Opecivers who have access to telescopes should improve the present opportunity for a sight of the most charming clescopic object in the heavers. The rings audergo a varie y of changes during the thirty years required for the planet's revolution. Just cow they are apparently rings no longer, but ines of light orejecting on each side of this golden ball of surpassing loveliness, while the heauty of the picture is increased by as many of the eight muons as their position and the p wer of the instrument can sammon igto the Jupiter is evening star, and so superb an obor to the evening ky that there is no need to sound his praises or call attention to the grand display be makes each night as leader and king of the starty host. But he is moving away from our vicioity ; bef rethe mouch has parsed his brightness will scasibly diminish, and at the and of the month he will sink below the horizin about 1 o'clock, leaving the field for lesser lights to take their turn for being in the ascendant. He rises now at half past four; at the end of the mouth at half pace two.

Mercury is evening star after the 5th, when he comes into superior conjunction with the san and sass at the same time. Ou the 31st he sets at about half-past five, only a half hour after the sun. He is invisible throughout the mouth, and, safely hidden in the sun's rays, tracks his rapid course, secure from terrestial vision. Venus is morning star, and rapidly reaching a distance from the sun that makes her the object of supreme interest among the morning stars. She now rises at a quarter after five, about three-quarters of an hour before the san; but in the latter part of the mouth she will rise not long after three, more than three hours before the sun. On the 30th she reaches that period of her greatest brilliace, occurring thirty six days after cath prices. Orders from country merchants her inferior conjunction. Early observer- wal then be rewarded by a sight of the larges, and most beautiful member of our plantary system in her most beaming plase. Toose who desire to watch her erratio movements will see, by marking her course among the stars of Leo. that she is moving rapidly, as she does near her conjunctions and that her course is retrograde or westward. She is seen now through the telescope as a waxing creesent, resembling a few days' old moon; but though only a small portion of her illuminated disc is turned towards us, her increased size makes her appear brighter than when at her superior cocjunction nearly her whole solighted crb is turned to the earth .-There is no better method of becoming familiar with this planet than to follow her phases from her present position just coming into view after her inferior conjunction until she comes around to the same point again. This peroid is called her synodic revolution, and is accomplished in five hundred and eighty four days, or about twenty of our months, during which time she is alreroately morning and evening star. Those who follow her source in this way will find the study one of expeeding interest and the crisp October mornings a delightful season for making the effort. Mars is the morning star, and is rapidly taking on a phase that will make him a p.ominent object of interest among the members of the solar family. His ruddy glow is assuming more warlike proportions, his siz-increases, and as he diresabave the boaiz in earlier each evening he seems to beam with a conscious pride as the time approaches when he may present again to mortal vision the tiny sate lites that crowned his ap-pearance at the opposition of 1877 The opposi-CIUARS, PIPES, &c.

> Uranus is the morning star, rising now at half past three; at the close of the month at half past one. He is still too far away to be visible to the naked eye, and of little account to ordinary ob-

The October moon ful's on the 29th. The old moon is in conjunction with Mars on the 4th, and the waning crescent and Venus will form a brilliant picture on the morning sky of the 13th. The new moon of the 15th will be in co.junc-tion with Jupiter on the 24th, with Saturn on the 28th, and with Mars on the 31st, two days after the full.

The planetary interest for the month centres again around the movements of the shining trio, Jupiter, Saturn and Mars. On he moonless evenings during the middle of the month they will be beautiful to behold, marking out with golden points the position of the ecliptic and girdling the heavens Jupiter will then be sinking to the west with diminishing lustre, Saturn moving overhead in hi, brightest phase, and J. T. CREIGHTON & SON. Mars rising in the east with an increasing glow of ruddy light.—Providence Journal.
